Opening Keynote Speaker: Edna Ross, Ph.D.

Edna Ross has been with the University of Louisville since 1984 and is an Associate Professor of Psychology with specializations in learning and cognitive psychology. She co-teaches one of the largest and most popular undergraduate courses at the university in two sections of Introduction to Psychology with total course enrollments of 600-700 students each semester.

Ross has received several awards for teaching and student involvement from the University of Louisville including the College of Arts and Sciences' Distinguished Teaching Award, the Delphi Center for Teaching and Learning's Faculty Favorite Award, the Black Faculty and Staff Faculty Recognition Award and the Porter Scholars' Outstanding Faculty Recognition Award. She regularly is honored as a Red and Black Faculty Mentor, an honor given by a student athlete to an instructor whose teaching and advising have inspired the student to achieve academic excellence.

In addition to her faculty role at the University of Louisville, Ross has a joint appointment with the Delphi Center for Teaching and Learning as the Specialist for Critical Thinking. In this capacity, she serves on the university's re-accreditation Quality Enhancement Plan team and is responsible for providing faculty development programming and training to university faculty on incorporating critical thinking activities into their courses. Ross continually strives to introduce and foster the effective use of instructional technology in her classes and serves as Chair of the University Instructional Technology Committee and the Chair of the College of Arts and Sciences' Technology and Facilities Committee.

As a regular contributor to the top psychology textbooks in the field, she gives several invited talks each year on topics ranging from diversity issues to using instructional technologies to infuse critical thinking skills into the classroom. Ross received her Ph.D. in experimental psychology from Kent State University.

Closing Keynote Speaker: J. R. Martinez

J. R. Martinez, winner of ABC's season 13 Dancing with the Stars with dance partner Karina Smirnoff, is an actor, spokesman and retired soldier. He played Brot Monroe, an injured Iraq combat veteran on the daytime drama All My Children. Born in Shreveport, LA, in 1983, Martinez and his mother, Maria Zavala, moved to Dalton, Ga. when he was 17. After high school, he joined the Army in September 2002 and underwent basic and advanced training at Fort Benning, Ga. He then was assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 502nd Infantry Regiment of the 101st Airborne Division in Fort Campbell, Ky.

On April 5, 2003, one month into his deployment to Iraq, the front-left tire of the Humvee he was driving hit a landmine. Though three other soldiers were ejected from the burning vehicle, Martinez was trapped inside and suffered smoke inhalation and severe burns to more than 40 percent of his body. After being evacuated to Landstuhl, Germany, for immediate care, he eventually was transferred to Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Texas. There, he spent another 34 months in recovery undergoing 33 surgeries including skin grafts and cosmetic surgeries.

During his time in recovery, a nurse asked Martinez to speak to another burn patient who had seen his body for the first time and had become withdrawn. After about 45 minutes of spending time with him, the patient opened the curtain, letting light into his room and his heart. It was then he realized the impact he had on this patient and decided to use his own experience to help others, visiting with several of the patients in the hospital, sharing his story and listening to theirs.

Since then, Martinez has become a highly sought-after motivational speaker, travelling the country to spread his message of resilience and optimism. He devotes himself to showing others the true value in making the most of every situation. He is called on by many groups, including large corporations, veterans groups, non-profits and schools and has appeared on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 60 Minutes, The View, CNN, FOX News, Good Morning America, Rachel Ray, Univision, along with other major national outlets.

Telling your story: Designing an integrated approach to program assessment

In an era of decreased funding and rising expectations, there is an increasing emphasis on program assessment within higher education. This institutional priority can be a challenge to disability resource professionals who are focused on creating institutional access rather than ensuring individual success. How can we document program effectiveness when student failure may be as appropriate an outcome of inclusion as success? This challenge, as well as minimal time and limited backgrounds in assessment, often leaves us struggling to even know where to begin.

This preconference session will address program assessment as a piece of the strategic planning process. To represent the impact of our offices, we need to design comprehensive evaluation plans that are fully integrated with our institution-wide work. We will discuss developing a clear, well-articulated mission and a set of measurable goals that can form the basis of a strong program of critical, ongoing evaluation. Through presentation, discussion and group work, participants will leave with useful tools for developing a strategy to enhance their successes and "tell their story" to the campus community.

Presented by Carol Funckes, University of Arizona

Carol Funckes is the Associate Director of Disability Resources at the University of Arizona. She has worked in higher education disability resources for more than 30 years, presented nationally and internationally and conducted program reviews of disability services offices on a variety of college campuses. Funckes has served on PEPNet West's Advisory Board and as a trainer for a federally funded model demonstration grant on progressive disability service delivery. At the University of Arizona, she oversees a staff of access consultants, technology staff and service coordinators responsible for fostering an inclusive campus environment through outreach, consultation and the provision of accommodations. Funckes has served AHEAD as its President, President Elect, Treasurer, Program Chair (2001), and UD/JUST Change Initiative member. She is currently the Chair of AHEAD's new Professional Development Standing Committee. Funckes is a collaborating author of AHEAD's best practices in documentation, universal design brochures and program assessment/review materials and is a recipient of AHEAD's Blosser and Diversity Awards.

Special Presentation by:

Stephan Hamlin-Smith, Executive Director, Association on Higher Education and Disability, (AHEAD) Charlotte, N.C. Smith will focus on his involvement and results of the national Advisory Commission on Accessible Instructional Materials in Postsecondary Education for Students with Disabilities.

Smith has been the executive director of AHEAD since 2002. AHEAD is the premiere professional organization committed to full and equal participation by people with disabilities in all facets and roles of postsecondary education. In his position with AHEAD, Smith directs the overall operations, public engagement, member services, funding and external relations. The organization serves more than 2,600 institutional and individual members in 17 countries. AHEAD has 34 U.S. state and multi-state affiliate organizations. In 2010, Smith became the executive officer of the Society for Disability Studies (SDS), the largest academic society in the world dedicated to the advancement of disability studies as an academic discipline with more than 400 members in 13 countries.

Recognizing that collaboration and contribution are keys to advancement for any good cause, Smith serves on numerous boards, advisory and executive committees and steering councils for national and international organizations and programs that work to eliminate barriers to equity for disabled people in education and society. In 2010, Smith was appointed as a commissioner for the U.S. Department of Education to address barriers related to accessibility of instructional materials in postsecondary education. Other specific hot topic areas of his involvement currently include: postsecondary opportunities for students with intellectual disabilities, increasingly effective transition practices from secondary to postsecondary education and employment, and advancing postsecondary educators' corporate understanding of disability and social responsibility.

Smith lives and works in Charlotte, N.C., where he is active in the local arts community, volunteers with animal and human rights organizations and enjoys the luxury of time at home with his family whenever he can.
